A Beginner’s Guide to
The P’nti of the Sandia Mountain Information Station

Beneath the Sandia Mountain on the eastern edge of Albuquerque, New Mexico (USA) lies an extraterrestrial facility managed by a Star Nation from Zeta Reticuli II called the P’nti (say pon-Tee.) The extensive Sandia Mountain Information Station complex lies 2 miles deep and was retrofitted into an ancient tunnel system already in existence. It has been managed by the P’nti for the past 15,000 years and acts as an information hub for extraterrestrials from all over this galaxy (and beyond) who come to visit our planet’s northern and western hemispheres. It is one of four land based information hubs on Earth managed by the P’nti; there are four deep ocean aquatic information stations as well.

The P’nti homeworld is P’ntl (say pon-tell). It is the 5th planet orbiting the further of the two stars of the binary system Zeta Reticuli and is approximately 40 light years from Earth. It is also an ocean world and is only slightly larger than Earth with a higher percentage of large freshwater lakes versus salt water oceans.

There are several nations from the general area of the constellation Reticuli that look similar and who possess bigger heads, large dark eyes and slender body types. The P’nti are the shortest of those nations that visit our planet and average about 4.5’ tall. They are naturally nocturnal. Their eyes have two lids, one similar to our own as well as a second retractable dark lid that acts as a light filter and protective barrier. Their irises are larger than ours and come in shades of blues, greens, browns, golds and violet. Their retinas are able to process visual information that Earth Human eyes can not. Their night vision is excellent and nearly full color. Communication with them is almost 100% telepathic and includes some hand gestures. The P’nti are considered a “neutral nation” among other Star Nations.

Many Star Nations visiting Earth tell us that we live on one of the most beautiful water planets in this part of the galaxy. When asked why they are here, their first response is, “It’s all about the water!” and explain that 75% of the extraterrestrial visitors to Earth do not come to visit us. Instead, they come because of the abundance of water here, to explore our oceans, and to communicate with the sentient nations that live beneath the surface.

According to the P’nti, Earth’s Official First Contact (OFC) is planned for the Fall of 2021 and there are currently 32 Star Nations who wish to participate in this public celebration event. They inform us that big climate shifts are rapidly descending upon us. With the increase of dramatic changes that now face of our planet, ALL of these interstellar/intergalactic nations are aware that we Earth Humans are running out of time and are going to need some help (again.) They wish to introduce themselves before things become critical.
To facilitate this process, and because many Star Nations communicate via telepathy, in December 2017, the P’nti asked for a beginner’s guide to improving telepathic skills written by them be published for online. The Telepathy 101 Primer is now available as a free download at officialfirstcontact.com. Private citizens from all over the world who have studied it and applied its guidelines are now receiving in person, CE5 contact and reporting are back with evidence, (also available to view on the website.)

The Sandia Mountain Station Crew has also been interacting on the worldwide social media platform Twitter since June 2015, when they requested an account be opened for them. Staff members of the Station Mountain Information Station, using the Twitter handle @sandiawisdom, respond to a variety of questions in detail via two local telepathic translators, Su Walker and Rev. White Otter. A handbook for hosting CE5 events written by them entitled Inviting ET, based on information provided by the P’nti, has also recently been published. The archive of over 48,000 tweets shared by the P’nti about themselves and their culture is searchable on officialfirstcontact.com.
